History – Flag Spring Cemetery in the Village of Newtown, Ohio

This cemetery is located on the west side of Round Bottom Road and two-tenths of a mile north of Cincinnati and Batavia Road (route 32) in Newtown, Ohio. Information published by Hamilton County Chapter of Ohio Genelogical Society, makes note "...that this cemetery was a historic site long before our pioneers first arrived in the area which they named Mercersburg. The largest of Adena Indian Mounds to be found in the Little Miami Valley is Block F, which is circled by one row of graves. The approximate 12 acre cemetery was established by the Independent Order of Oddfellows, Lodge No. 152 in 1863. This data found in Hamilton Co., Ohio Burial Records, Vol. Two, Anderson Twp., 1800 - 1989.

Welcome to Flag Spring Cemetery also known as Flagstone Cemetery (on the Google maps) or the Odd Fellows Cemetery (IOOF). The Flag Spring Cemetery contains many historic graves and monuments as well as two Native American mounds.

Source: Wikipedia "The Odd Fellows' Cemetery Mound is a Native American mound in the southwestern part of the U.S. state of Ohio. The mound is an oval approximately 110 feet (34 m) long and 90 feet (27 m) wide; its height is 11.3 feet (3.4 m). It is believed to have been built by the Adena culture. The mound is one of the few remnants of what was once a large complex of prehistoric earthworks and other archaeological sites. While multiple village sites are still in existence around Newtown, including the Perin Village Site just 0.3 miles (0.5 km) to the northwest, many of the earthworks have been destroyed. Because of its location in a cemetery, the Odd Fellows' Cemetery Mound has been spared destruction; although a few graves have been dug around the mound, there has been no significant damage done as a result. A smaller mound, known as the "Odd Fellows' Cemetery Mound 2," is located within the same cemetery; it is only a small fraction of the larger mound's size. This mound has been partially damaged by the digging of six graves into its side; however, no artifacts are known to have been found during the interment process. For many years, the Odd Fellows' Cemetery Mound has been a landmark in the community. In 1943, a survey of Newtown performed by the Federal Writers' Project highlighted it and noted that it was "the only mound distinctly visible" in the vicinity of the village. Thirty years later, the mound was listed on the National Register of Historic Places because of its potential to become an archaeological site. Four years later, the nearby Perin Village Site was granted a similar status.
